Gatso to branch out in Australia

Acquisition extends the provision of traffic enforcement services

Haarlem / Melbourne, April 6th 2011 – Today Gatso announced it will branch out into Australia. The worldwide expert in developing products and services for traffic enforcement has recently completed the acquisition of Australia's leading supplier of vehicle enforcement systems, Aspect Traffic.

Gatso has been a supplier of enforcement systems in Australia for more than two decades. The company provides effective solutions in automated red light and speed enforcement, environmental zone enforcement and ANPR enforcement systems. Gatso has developed products for the Australian market such as the Gatso Radar 24 Aus mobile speed camera which it later marketed throughout the world.

Aspect is the leading supplier of enforcement systems in Australia, having worked with Gatso since 2003. Aspect operates throughout Australia, having installed major enforcement projects and systems in all states and territories.

Australia is the front runner in setting the standard for traffic law enforcement. The market for traffic enforcement is changing rapidly from a product to a service-orientated industry, both in Australia and around the world. Today's announcement extends Gatso's influence in the provision of traffic enforcement services.

Stephen Gateley, Aspect Traffic's Managing Director: "With the strength of Gatso behind us, we will be able to expand our local presence and attack markets we had previously been unable to address. We are also excited that we can now work even closer with Gatso to tap into its experience, expertise and full range of services and systems."

Timo Gatsonides, Managing Director of Gatso: "We have a long history in the Australian market and we are committed to further the company's substantial growth of the last seven years through this acquisition. The investment in Aspect will bring us even closer to our Australian clients."
